Correctional Law Section Summer Honors Program (San Francisco)

The California Department of Justice, Office of the Attorney General is currently recruiting students for its 2003 Summer Honors Program. The Criminal Division, Correctional Law Section ("CLS") provides exciting and rewarding opportunities for candidates interested in pursuing a career in public service generally or correctional litigation specifically.

Deputy Attorneys General in CLS represent employees of the Department of Corrections and Board of Prison Terms in civil suits filed by prisoners and parolees. Cases range in scope from individual damages claims to large-scale class actions seeking permanent injunctive relief and present issues ranging from state tort claims to complex constitutional issues. Deputies are responsible for their own cases from the initial appearance in trial court through appeal, and appear regularly in both state and federal court. The majority of the section's cases are federal civil rights lawsuits, and habeas petitions challenging conditions of confinement or parole unsuitability determinations.

Students participating in CLS's summer program may assist deputies with legal research and writing projects; prepare civil pleadings, including motions to dismiss and motions for summary judgment; and draft civil discovery requests or responses. Typical motions address procedural and substantive issues, including qualified immunity and the merits of constitutional claims. Students may also have the opportunity to draft or to make substantial contributions to appellate briefs. Each student is supervised by a deputy, who will review the student's written work.

Applicants for the CLS summer program must have excellent writing, research, and analytical skills. Applicants should have completed law school classes in constitutional law, civil procedure, and research and writing. Appellate and trial advocacy may be helpful. First-year students who have completed the recommended courses may be accepted into the program.

Students interested in applying to CLS's San Francisco summer program should submit a cover letter, resume, transcript (unofficial is acceptable), and writing to:
